Works No. 9 may indirectly trace its origin back to 1872, although the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company first took over in 1895. Men are yet living who helped erect the buildings and operate the crude furnace from which the first glass was cast in the summer of 1874. Now one of the largest and most modern factories anywhere for making glass, the present plant covers approximately 85 acres of ground, with about 20 acres under roof, and employs around 2000 people; the grounds rival a college campus for beauty and orderliness.
